CONTRIBUTORS' COLUMN

KIRK HAZEN is associate professor of linguistics in the Department of English at West Virginia University. He specializes in variationist sociolinguistics, and his interests include Appalachian English, African American English, and varieties of Southern U.S. English. He currently directs an NSPF-funded project (BCS 0743489) to develop a sociolinguistic profile of English in Appalachia. His teaching goal is to foster better understanding of language variation in his students and the public.

JACQUELYN RAHMAN earned her Ph.D. in linguistics at Stanford University. She is assistant professor of linguistics at Miami University, where she is also director of the linguistics program. Her research interests include variation and change, particularly with regard to social class in the African American community. She is also interested in the linguistic construction of facets of identity among performers and media personalities.

EDITORIAL POLICY

American Speech is concerned principally with the English language in the Western Hemisphere, although contributions dealing with English in other parts of the world, with other languages influencing English or influenced by it, and with general linguistic theory may also be submitted for consideration by the Editorial Board. The journal welcomes articles dealing with current usage, dialectology, and the history and structure of English. American Speech is not committed to any particular theoretical framework, but preference is given to articles that are likely to be of interest to a wide readership.

MANUSCRIPTS FOR PUBLICATION

Books for review, manuscripts of articles for American Speech, and studies of monograph length for the Publication of the American Dialect Society series should be addressed to Charles E. Carson, Managing Editor, American Speech, Duke University Press, 905 W. Main St. Ste. 18B, Durham NC 27701-2075 (e-mail: amspeech@dukeupress.edu). Send items for possible inclusion in "Among the New Words" to Wayne Glowka, Department of English and Speech, Georgia College and State University, Milledgeville GA 31061-0490.

Three copies of a manuscript should be submitted. Authors should retain a copy, as manuscripts will not be returned. Manuscripts should be prepared in conformity with The Chicago Manual of Style (15th ed., 2003). Documentation must be given in the text itself using the author-date system (chap. 16), with a list of references at the end prepared in the humanities style. Endnotes should be on separate sheets before the references list. Figures, tables, and graphic materials must be suitable for typesetting or photographic reproduction and should be placed on separate sheets at the end of the manuscript.

Citation forms are to be italicized and glosses enclosed in single quotation marks, without intervening punctuation (e.g., hushpuppy 'fried corn bread'). Technical terms and emphasized words should be indicated by double underlining for SMALL CAPITALS, rather than by italics. Phonetic and phonemic transcriptions should be restricted to the symbols of the International Phonetic Alphabet. Word lists should be prepared in accordance with the "Style Sheet for Glossaries" (American Speech 45 [1970]: 141-51).
